This early twentieth-century Colonial-Revival house faces west onto Maryland Route 765. Set on a concrete foundation, it is a square-form, two-story double-pile, framed and weather-boarded three-bay structure with a central doorway and an exterior brick chimney on the north gable end. The windows are glazed with eight-over-eight double-hung sash on the second story and six-over-six double-hung sash on the first story. The front doorway is embellished with a flat segmental-arched pediment. There is a one-story screened-in porch built onto the north gable end.
